Unicef's Tap Project

In our relatively temperate environment, most people don't worry about running out of tap water. In fact, many of us don't even drink it, preferring the frou-frou bottled stuff to the faucet. Meanwhile, more than a billion people around the globe lack safe drinking water of any kind. UNICEF's new Tap Project is helping alleviate the crisis by encouraging diners in New York restaurants to "order" a glass of their famous tap water for $1 on Thursday, March 22: World Water Day. While a cross-country trek isn't in the cards for most of us, Bay Area residents can still help simply by making a donation to the Tap Project.
