

Los Angeles Times

August 12, 2007

L.A. restaurants should emulate what some New York City restaurants will be doing on World Water Day: suggesting that customers pay for the usually free water, with the proceeds going to water projects through UNICEF's Tap Project. Dirty water kills thousands of children and adults in developing countries. The program could become a regular feature. What an easy way to make a real difference.

SARAN KIRSCHBAUM
Los Angeles